Biographical/Administrative History

In the wake of Vatican II, Archbishop John P. Cody established the Commission on Human Relations and Ecumenism in 1966. Rev. Edward M. Egan was appointed secretary and Rev. Cyril Nemecek was appointed assistant secretary. The Commission - composed of clerical, religious, and lay people - was to guide the Archdiocese in the implementation of the ecumenical directives established by Vatican II. The Commission was also to provide leadership in the field of Human Relations and Social Justice, which had formerly been forwarded by the Office of Urban Affairs under John J. Egan. The Commission played a particularly important role in issues surrounding fair housing and racial unrest during that year. In 1967, Cardinal Cody appointed regional co-ordinators for Human Relations and Ecumenism who were responsible for establishing Parish Programs for a Community Life in parishes throughout the archdiocese. Rev. Edward Egan was appointed co-chancellor for the Office in 1968. The first "Guidelines for Ecumenism" were published later in 1968 and again revised in cooperation with the dioceses of Gary, Joliet, and Rockford in 1971. In 1969, Mr. Christopher Carley was selected as the new Director of the Archdiocesan Community Life Program and was responsible for developing the handbook "Organizing for Community Life," which was used in parishes throughout the Archdiocese.

In 1973, Rev. William J. Lion was appointed to succeed Father Egan as co-chancellor. That same year, Mr. Patrick Nash was selected to prepare a research and planning model for the archdiocese, which laid the groundwork for the Archdiocesan Office of Research and Planning created in 1975. Under the leadership of Father Lion, the Office took part in many community organizing initiatives related to equity and social justice across the Chicagoland region, including the Chicago Conference on Religion and Race, the Chicagoland Leadership Prayer Breakfast, the Joint Action Board, the Leadership Council of Metropolitan Open Communities, and the Fair Housing Center. From 1976 to 1979, Mr. Peter Foote served as the secretary for Human Relations, Ecumenism, and the Lay Apostolate.

The Office was an active participant in many of the defining events of the era: the Contract Buyers struggle, the debate surrounding school busing, Dr. Martin Luther King's visit to Chicago, Pope John Paul's visit to Chicago, and the Nazi marches in Skokie and Marquette Park.

Provenance

This material, from the Office of Human Relations and Ecumenism, more closely resembles administrative files, and is part of a large accession (198535003), totaling 46 boxes. The date span of the materials cover 1965 -1985. The office began as the Commission on Human Relations and Ecumenism in 1966, and became the Office of the Co-Chancellor for Human Relations and Ecumenism. In 1979, the newly formed Office for the Ministry of Peace and Justice assumed the educational program of the social justice, and in 1984 all of the Office of Human Relations and Ecumenism was placed in the Community Services section of Peace and Justice. In 1988, the office was divided, becoming the Office of Human Relations and the Office of Ecumenical/Interreligious Affairs. After 1991, the Office of Human Relations no longer appears. The materials came to the archives in 1985, just after Rev. John Egan took over the office in 1984 and after it became part of the Office for Peace and Justice's Community Services, both of which are now under the Department of Evangelization and Catechesis.

Scope and Content

The collection contains documents from the Commission for Human Relations and Ecumenism and their work on a wide variety of issues that defined the 1960s-1980s, including poverty, race, ethnicity, housing, urban planning, the energy crisis, evangelicalism. The contents of the collection also reveals a Church that was confronting modernity within its own teachings and practices, especially in regards to the Church's active role in society more broadly. Overall, the collection demonstrates the Archdiocese's commitment to addressing the social justice and spiritual needs of the community during a time of great social change. This is primarily seen through the collection's materials regarding social justice and social issues, the Commission's involvement in a number of religious and lay planning organizations, and the growth of ecumenical outreach to other faiths.

The majority of the collection's contents is related to the Commission's interest in or involvement with social issues or trends from 1965 to 1988. With urban unrest and racial disturbances caused by economic uncertainty and demographic change occurring in cities across the nation, the Commission looked to Catholic social teaching and the drive towards embracing modernity as defined in Vatican II to begin to address these urban issues in its ministry - regardless of whether or not all of the beneficiaries of such ministry were Catholic. This larger concern for the good of society broadly speaking is notable throughout the collection's contents. Other materials in the collection show the Commission's and the Archdiocese's education and outreach to parishioners regarding social issues, including films, booklets, and programs related to poverty, fair housing, race and ethnicity, neighborhood organizing/improvement, new roles for women, and interreligious dialogue.

The collection also contains a great deal of information regarding the Commission on Human Relations and Ecumenism's involvement or interest in religious and lay organizations that sought to address social issues. Lay organizations ranged from national in scope to neighborhood-level, and included the City of Chicago Committee on Urban Opportunity, the Illinois Committee for Fair Housing, and the United States Model Cities Program. Other organizations had similar purposes but were sponsored by the broader Church and affiliated organizations, such as the United States Catholic Conference and the Catholic Action Federation. These records reflect the Church's - and American society's more general -belief that institutionalized strategy and planning could effectively solve urban, regional, or social justice issues. Most of the involvement in these social issue-centered organizations ends around the 1980s. The Commission's presence in these organizations - especially in lay groups - also reveals that politicians and professionals acknowledged the centrality of the Church in decision-making and institutional planning in the 1960s and 1970s.

Finally, the collection includes information regarding the growth of ecumenical outreach to other faiths. This activity is especially focused on dialogue with other Christian faiths, especially Episcopalians, Lutherans, Methodists, and Presbyterians, as well as Baptists and Greek Orthodox communities. Also notable is the Commission's involvement in ecumenical dialogue with Jewish communities and their participation in Jewish organizations. The collection details the Commission and the Archdiocese's participation in a variety of organizations and workshops, including the Secretariat for Catholic-Jewish Relations, the Illinois Council/Conference of Churches (which Father Lion chaired for some years), the Chicago Board of Rabbis, the Church Federation of Greater Chicago, and the National Workshop on Christian Unity. A large portion of the ecumenical contents of the collection are related to Father Ed Egan's research and development of the Archdiocese's first "Guidelines for Ecumenism," and his communication with other arch/dioceses across the country regarding ecumenical work.
